The Simple Art Of Ribbon Design (Watson-Guptill Crafts)

Synopsis

This guide to ribbon design begins with a survey of ribbons from around the world. After basic preparatory steps are reviewed, such as laundering, pressing, steaming and hand-dyeing ribbons, the book unfolds: a flower guide to ribbon design with steps for creating rose, pansy and poppy patterns.

Although I have several books on the art of ribbonwork, this is by far my favorite. The photography is exquisite and plentiful throughout the book. Step by step instructions are so clear and precise that even the most novice handiworker will have no problem reproducing these beauties. If I could recommend just one book on this subject, this is it.

This book offers a selection of ribbon roses and other flowers made by sewing ribbon. The author offers a selection of different uses for the flower which I found very creative. The instructions are clear with beautiful illustrations. I would recommend this to anyone thinking of making ribbon flowers for a hat. She has some lovely examples.

This is a grand book for instruction and ideas on how to design and develop ribbon flowers. I would heartily recommend this book to the beginner and the more advanced crafter.

Very good reference of ribbon flower making.

I liked mine so well that I got another one as a gift for a very dear friend who also likes crafting flowers from ribbon.

Beautiful pictures (other than the dark, gloomy-looking ones, but that's because I love bright colors) great instructions. However, the only ribbon the author uses/talks about are hand-dyed silk ribbons. I don't know about others, but even if I could find "hand-dyed silk ribbons" I probably couldn't afford them. Why aren't there instructions on using grosgrain? Satin? There are so many gorgeous ribbons available, I don't understand the obsession with the hand-dyed silks. How many people can actually find/afford them? However, I repeat...the instructions are excellent, so I will use those with my favorite grosgrains and satins.
