Customer Reviews

Henri Murger (1822-1861) wrote for magazines and newspapers and authored several books of fiction but is remembered today only for this novel of artistic life in nineteenth-century Paris.

A very frustrating edition of the "other" La Boheme. What you are buying is a photocopy of the piano/vocal score that has been bound (paperback; glue). It's a work in the public domain, so that is fair enough. But it is an extremely sloppily put together edition. The copies have been trimmed so that many of the page numbers are cut off, pages 70 through 84 are printed twice - and with no page numbers on at least 40% of the pages, there is no way to check that the rest are all present and in the proper order. As a copy to browse it may do, but I wouldn't dream of risk using this for a production. Just a small amount of care could have made this an invaluable volume - such a shame!
