It is a gift from Mother Nature and without it, primitive man might not have survived. Long before man learned to communicate with the written alphabet, he communicated through simple drawings and these messages were done on cave walls and on animal skins which he had killed for food. With the skin of animals, he was able to clothe himself and protect himself from cold; he was also able to provide shelter for himself. A particular period of time cannot be placed on when leather working came into being but modern archaeology has uncovered leather articles and artifacts from cultures dating back over 33 centuries and found them to be in an excellent state of preservation. Customer Reviews

Poorly written, with multiple errors. A simple proofread would solve most issues. Overall, it was worth $3.00. But not by much.

There were many grammatical errors, and I found the lack of illustrations in a "how to guide" to be frustrating. There were also no links to additional resources or vendor recommendations. I am sure the author enjoys their craft, but I wish more time and attention to detail had been spent on this guide.
